Position of civic society organizations against attempts of political parties and their leaders to exercise pressure over the civil society

On September 30, 2019, in Bulgaria the nationalist party IMRO-BNM has sent a signal to the Prosecutor General to cease the activity of the human rights organization — Bulgarian Helsinki Committee.

We, 93 Bulgarian and European associations, networks and foundations, consider such public attacks for inadmissible, they erode the public trust in the nongovernmental sector and they are used for political purposes which contradict the public interest.

The Bulgarian Constitution and the European Union Treaty guarantees people their right of association so they can fully participate in the public life. The nongovernmental sector is the main driving force of a civil society in every country. Civic organizations have goals and values which serve the people and provide them with possibility to contribute to the social development, but they also protect civic rights and lawful interests even if they have to oppose institutions, political parties and companies. Its existence is at the very core of democracy.

Statements that say, that by "organizing seminars" and presenting awards an organization can "exercise pressure and influence over court decisions" and its activity "contradicts the Constitution and the good morals", as stated by the Bulgarian political party IMRO-BNM, are absurd and populistic. In case such dangerous perceptions are accepted as a ground for branding or closing of an organization, this will mean that every association can be attacked by any political party which does not like the topic of an organized training, for example. It can also mean that any political party can try to silence different opinions and positions. The purpose of the civil organizations is exactly this – to provide opportunity for discussion of topics which are important for the society.

All attempts to redirect the negative public energy in Bulgaria against the civil organizations because they protect human rights and organize trainings, is a very dangerous tendency which increases public mistrust in the civil sector and has a freezing effect over it. Civic sector activities is actually a sign showing that civil society does exist in Bulgaria and it is part of an open public debate which facilitates the functioning of a democratic state.

The right of association is a basic civil right which guarantees peoples' participation in such debates and in taking decisions without necessarily participating in a political party. All attacks against civic engagement and activity and against free media are an attempt to silence peoples' voice.
